

Kevin Curly CBE, previously Chief Executive of NAVCA, was the keynote speaker on Resilience in Austerity: Separating Fact from Fiction, the full script can be found here but there are a few main facts below relating to funding, charity giving and resilience:

- Total voluntary sector income from government is forecast to be £1.6bn
- a year lower by 2017/18 than in 2011/12, if cuts are implemented
- proportionately.
- 65,000 jobs lost in frontline services in UK since 2011
- Drop of £1.7bn in charity giving between 2011-2012
- Drop in both number of donors to charities and in average donation given to charities – more statistics on this here
- Statistics say that 1 in every 4 people do not give at all – time or money - those who donate or give time are also those more likely to vote – civic engagement
- Notable volunteer increase since 2012 and the Olympics, 29% of adults volunteer monthly compared to 25% in 2011
- Legacy giving has also dropped, this is thought to relate to pressures on grandparents to finance grandchildren's education and so less at end of life. Government inheritance tax cut to help increase this.
- Many companies have begun giving staff time in kind rather than donations, corporate giving to charity only makes up 5% of charity giving.
- Two thirds of time and money given to charities comes from just 9% of the population.

This was followed by workshops, the slides of these are below:

- Building Relationships with Private Sector
- Funders are People too
- Improving Later Life
- Strengthening Resilience through Diversity